From: Yajima Satoshi
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 1/28/02 5:19am
Subject: Microsoft Settlement

I'm happy to submit my comment on Microsoft Settlement.
I would like to say that Java is somehow misunderstood.
Before the judgement, it is necessary to reconsider what Java really is.

* Java is rather more disadvantageous to customers;
  (Windows never need Java.)

  Although Java is said to be multi-platform, it is NOT correct in some sense.
  Java is one monopolying platform which prevents each vendor from developing their unique features of operating system.
Java uses its own User Interfaces which would eliminate unique User Interfaces features of each OS vendor.
Most of Windows customes are NOT familiar with the Java standard user interface, Swing.
  Java is a threat thad prevents operating system from persuing unique benefits of each own features.
  So, it is not strange that Microsoft didn't adopt pure Java technology.

Best Regards,
Satoshi Yajima (kv8s-yjm@asahi-net.or.jp)
Itabashi, Tokyo, Japan